Trouble with the Index

Walead Beshty, Matthew Brandt, John Divola, Victoria Fu, Farrah Karapetian, Heather Rasmussen, James Welling, Jennifer West, and Mario Ybarra, Jr.

February 1–June 21, 2014

RIVERSIDE, Calif., Dec. 20, 2013 — The California Museum of Photography at UCR ARTSblock presents Trouble with the Index, on view in the main gallery of the museum from February 1 through June 21, 2014, featuring works by Walead Beshty, Matthew Brandt, John Divola, Victoria Fu, Farrah Karapetian, Heather Rasmussen, James Welling, Jennifer West, and Mario Ybarra, Jr. A reception celebrating this and other exhibitions will be held at the museum on Saturday, February 1, 6-9pm, and is free and open to the public.

The truth of photographs has always been conflicted. Light hits sensitized paper to produce a picture of the world, capturing a moment in time. This was here, every photograph asserts. But the picture is flat and static, bound by edges and defined by depth of field, reproducible and variable in size: an artificial organization of a world that is spatial and temporal. Nevertheless, this was here. Since photography was invented, it has carried with it this basic condition of “indexicality.” A photograph must exhibit some element of proof, some trace of reality, to be a photograph.

Trouble with the Index presents a selection of photographs by Southern California-based artists whose work grapples with this complicated state of photographic truth. Some of the works included here illustrate an index found in the world, as in John Divola’s photograph of light passing through a broken window, and Heather Rasmussen's depiction of a bathroom wall, charred in a fire. There is an attention to size in the works gathered here, as in Mario Ybarra, Jr.'s photomural, which depicts the interior walls of a bunker in near one-to-one scale, and James Welling's use of a common household material – foil – that nevertheless might conjure a vast geographical topography. Some of the works have been generated through direct imprints: Walead Beshty uses FedEx to ship a pristine cube to the museum, where it is displayed bearing all the marks of that transit, and Farrah Karapetian makes photograms of ice, even while the material melts and slips during the print’s production.

Victoria Fu’s prints are the culminations of numerous in-studio processes that include projection, photography, printing, construction, digital manipulation, re-projection, re-photography, and re-printing. Matthew Brandt’s work combines two distinct registers of indexicality: after making a straight photograph of a lake, he then soaks it in that lake’s water. Jennifer West also embraces some elements of chance, frequently intervening in the image-making process with unconventional materials. After filming Spiral Jetty – an earthwork constructed by the artist
Robert Smithson on the edge of the Great Salt Lake in Utah in 1970 — West exposed the film multiple times, treating it to materials such as saline, brine shrimp, citrus juices, and vinegars.

Photographs alone can no longer secure their truth claim simply by accurately depicting the world in two dimensions. Through additional maneuvers artists privilege the index over pictorialism, pushing their resulting pictures even to complete abstraction. Far from acting as invisible players, the artists themselves — through their actions — are registered in each work; This was here is now I was here.

Matthew Brandt (b. 1982, Los Angeles) is a Los Angeles-based artist interested in physicality, process, and landscape. His ability to stretch the readings of images — multiplying them both physically and conceptually — speaks directly to his interest in how images loom and meanings shift within a shared visual history. His work is currently on view in a solo exhibition at the Columbus Museum of Art, Ohio (2013–14), and will travel to the Virginia Museum of Contemporary Art, Virginia Beach (2014). Brandt’s work is in the permanent collections of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art (LACMA); The J. Paul Getty Museum, Los Angeles; the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; the Hammer Museum, Los Angeles; Bidwell Projects, Ohio; the Elton John Collection; the Columbus Museum of Art, Ohio; the Brooklyn Museum of Art; the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts; the Cincinnati Art Museum, Ohio; the Royal Danish Library, and the Wieland Collection, among others. His work has been featured in more than seventy solo exhibitions in Japan, Europe, Mexico, Australia, and the United States, including John Divola: As Far As I Could Get, an expansive three-venue exhibition organized by the Santa Barbara Museum of Art with the Los Angeles County Museum of Art and the Pomona College Museum of Art (2013–14). Divola has been honored with numerous awards including the Individual Artist Fellowship from the National Endowment for the Arts (1973, 1976, 1979, 1990); the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Fellowship (1986); the Fintridge Foundation Fellowship (1998); the City of Los Angeles Artist Grant (1999); and the California Arts Council Individual Artist Fellowship (1998). James Welling (b. 1951, Hartford, CT) is a Los Angeles-based artist who has been questioning the norms of representation since the 1970s. His work centers on an exploration of photography, shuffling the elemental components of the medium to produce a distinctly uncompromising body of work. Jennifer West (b. Topanga, CA) is a Los Angeles-based artist who makes films, performances, photographs, drawings, sculptural works, and zines. She employs various unique processes, subjecting film negative and leader to an eclectic range of idiosyncratic substances including nail polish, liquid eyeliner, deodorant, wine, spices, gelatin, alcohol, body glitter, paintballs, and hot springs water, as well as such physical interventions as skateboarding, smearing, crushing, drawing, and throwing. West is influenced by classical structuralist film, urban mythology, folklore, and popular culture, and combines everyday actions and materials to create hypnotic, fast-paced films. Her work has been the subject of solo exhibitions at S1 Artspace, Sheffield, England (2012); Contemporary Art Museum, Houston (2010); Kunsthalle Nuremberg, Germany (2010); Transmission Gallery, Glasgow (2008); and White Columns, New York (2007), among elsewhere. Mario Ybarra, Jr. (b. 1972, Los Angeles) is a Los Angeles-based artist who incorporates sculpture, painting, installation, and performance into his work. Citing his childhood spent in the port community of Wilmington in Los Angeles as a continual source of inspiration, Ybarra’s work resonates both locally and globally. Though much of Ybarra’s work has been described as “Chicano art,” he is purposefully resistant to such biographical categorizations, attempting to challenge any easy conflation of identity and aesthetics. His work has been the subject of solo exhibitions such as Double Feature, Honor Fraser Gallery, Los Angeles (2013); Mario Ybarra, Jr.: The Tío Collection, Santa Barbara Contemporary Arts Forum (2012); Wilmington Good, Cardi Black Box, Milan (2011); Silver and Blacks, Michael Janssen Gallery, Berlin (2010); Take Me Out... No Man Is An Island, Art Institute of Chicago (2008); and Black Squirrel Society, Lehmann Maupin Gallery, New York (2008). Ybarra has been included in numerous group exhibitions including The Manifest Destiny Billboard Project, organized by the Los Angeles Nomadic Division (2013-14); Around The Table: Food, Creativity, and Community, San Jose Museum of Art (2013); Made in L.A., the Los Angeles Biennial organized by the Hammer Museum in collaboration with LAXART (2012); Invisible Cities, Instituto Cervantes, Madrid (2010); Whitney Biennial, New York (2008); Phantom Sightings: Art After the Chicano Movement, Los Angeles County Museum of Art (2008); Prague Biennale 3, Czech Republic (2007); The World as a Stage, Tate Modern, London, and Institute of Contemporary Art, Boston (2007); California Biennial, Orange County Museum of Art, Newport Beach (2006); and Alien Nation, Institute of Contemporary Art, London (2006). In 2008, Ybarra was awarded a Levitt Fellowship at Williams College, Massachusetts, and in 2011 he was the artist-in-residence at the Århus Kunstbygning Centre for Contemporary Art in Denmark. Ybarra earned his BFA from the Otis College of Art and Design, Los Angeles in 1999, and an MFA from the University of California, Irvine in 2001.

FLASH! Job Piston
California Museum of Photography
November 9, 2013–February 22, 2014

FLASH! Job Piston is the presentation of six works from “Reds” (2012-13), a series of photograms made by pressing light-sensitive darkroom paper to the surface of a glowing laptop screen, then, as the artists describes, “dipping the pixels into a chemical bath.” This groundbreaking process produces intimate yet provocative red portraits, each one unique, which hover in a state both analog and digital.

FLASH! features recent photo-based works by contemporary artists and is presented on the third floor of the CMP. The series is curated by Joanna Szupinska-Myers, CMP Curator of Exhibitions.

CMP Projects: Claudia Joskowicz
California Museum of Photography
November 23, 2013–April 12, 2014

Sympathy for the Devil (2011) by Claudia Joskowicz depicts a reenacted encounter between two immigrant neighbors living in La Paz, Bolivia as they wordlessly pass one another in the elevator of their building. The installation is comprised of two video channels, one for each of the protagonists – an anonymous Polish Jew who fled Europe during World War II, and the notorious former Gestapo Captain Klaus Barbie – in this anecdote from the 1970s that has been passed down in the artist’s family.

CMP Projects is an ongoing series of solo presentations on the second floor of the CMP. The series is curated by Joanna Szupinska-Myers, CMP Curator of Exhibitions.

Sentry: Works by Joe Biel
Sweeney Art Gallery and Culver Center for the Arts
December 21, 2013–March 22, 2014

Sentry: Works by Joe Biel features large-scale drawings on paper and a monumental drawing installation specifically produced for the Culver Center of the Arts. Working primarily with watercolor, graphite, and color pencils, Biel’s figurative drawings are loosely composed in panoramic landscapes with latent narratives that tamper with the complexity and irony of the human existence. In addition to the works on paper, visitors will be able to view Biel’s new work in progress – a site-specific drawing that will encompass the grand atrium walls of the Culver Center. This large-scale installation drawing, Sentry, will be completed by the opening date of the exhibition on December 21, 2013.

Sentry: Works by Joe Biel is organized by UCR ARTSblock and is curated by Jennifer Frias, Associate Curator, Sweeney Art Gallery. UCR’s College of Humanities, Arts, and Social Sciences (CHASS) have provided support.

Barbara Morgan: Body Montage
California Museum of Photography
January 4–May 17, 2014

American photographer Barbara Morgan (1900-92) is most known for her photographs of luminaries in American modern dance in the 1940s and 50s such as choreographers Martha Graham, Pearl Primus, and Charles Weidman. Her photographs capture modern dance’s sense of dramatic action characteristic of the time through her intimate portraits of choreographers and dancers. Her use of shadow and curvilinear line distills American modern dance as expressing a youthful, exuberant spirit reflective of national attitudes. Morgan also produced a series of photomontages – in the 40s still an uncommon practice in the field of American fine art photography— in which she layered images of city buildings, parks, human bodies, and natural objects to make surreal, singular images. This exhibition proposes aesthetic and conceptual relationships between Morgan’s photomontages and her dance photography. Both bodies of work synthesize movement, curving lines, and contrasting forms into expressive portraits of energetic action.

Barbara Morgan: Body Montage is organized by UCR ARTSblock and is curated by Harmony Wolfe, CMP Collections Assistant.

Flaws in the Diamond: Exploitation and Empire in South Africa, c. 1900
Selections from the Keystone-Mast Collection
California Museum of Photography
February 22–July 19, 2014

Flaws in the Diamond: Exploitation and Empire in South Africa, c. 1900 presents South Africa in forty pictures culled from the extraordinary riches of the Keystone-Mast Collection, part of the permanent collection of the California Museum of Photography at UCR ARTSblock. Organized in four sections, Flaws in the Diamond forms a valuable portrait of South Africa undergoing rapid social and political change at the beginning of the last century. This presentation offers a glimpse of the forces that would lead to apartheid, the system of racial segregation that would remain in place until 1994, and its eventual dismantling.

The California Museum of Photography at UCR ARTSblock maintains the world’s largest collection of original stereoscopic prints and negatives. The forty photographs presented as part of the exhibition Flaws in the Diamond were selected from the thousands held within the Keystone-Mast Collection, part of the museum’s permanent collection since 1977.

Flaws in the Diamond is organized by the California Museum of Photography at UCR ARTSblock, and is guest curated by Thomas Cogswell, UCR Professor of History, with Santos Z. Roman, UCR graduate student in History.
